2. What is the hypothesis?
 The hypothesis is that as the temperature increases, the rate of reaction will also increase.

3. What are the variables?
 The independent variable is temperature. The dependent variable is the rate of reaction. The controlled variables are the concentration of hydrogen peroxide and the concentration of potassium iodide.

4. What is the procedure?
 The procedure involves measuring the time taken for a fixed volume of hydrogen peroxide to react with a fixed volume of potassium iodide at different temperatures. The reaction is monitored by the appearance of a blue color.

5. What are the results?
 The results show that the rate of reaction increases with temperature. The time taken for the reaction to complete decreases as the temperature increases.

6. What is the conclusion?
 The conclusion is that the rate of reaction between hydrogen peroxide and potassium iodide increases with temperature.

7. What are the limitations?
 The limitations of the experiment are that the concentration of hydrogen peroxide and potassium iodide were not precisely controlled, and the temperature was not measured accurately.

8. What are the suggestions for improvement?
 The suggestions for improvement are to use more precise measuring equipment, to control the concentration of the reactants more accurately, and to measure the temperature more precisely.

The figure consists of three subplots arranged in a 2x2 grid (with the bottom-right cell empty). The top-left subplot is a 3D surface plot of a function $f(x, y)$ over a domain D . The surface is colored with a gradient from blue (low values) to red (high values). The top-right subplot is a 2D contour plot of the same function, showing the level sets of $f(x, y)$ as contour lines. The bottom-left subplot is a 2D line plot showing the function's value along a specific path, with the x-axis labeled x and the y-axis labeled $f(x, y)$. The bottom-right subplot is empty.
